City of McKinney, Library Technician, Community Engagement, Supplemental Answers (as submitted 19 Oct 2026)

Our Community Engagement department creates programs and events that bring people together. We are looking for people who bring energy, enthusiasm, and initiative. Tell us about a time you helped make a moment or experience better, more fun, or more meaningful for other people. What did you do, how did that experience turn out, and what did you enjoy about being part of it?

At the University of Austin I worked with a donor on a gift of a complete Harvard Classics set to the campus library, and I handled it from the first conversation through to the books being on the shelf.

That meant the cultivation work first: learning what the donor cared about, making the case for the library, and staying with the conversation until the gift was made. Then the intake side, receiving the set, documenting it, and recording the gift. I gave them a tour of the library in person, and afterward I kept them updated on where the books had been placed and how the collection around them was coming together.

The result was that the donor could point to a specific shelf. They knew which set was theirs and where it sat, rather than having given to a library in the abstract.

What I enjoyed was being with it the whole way. Most development work ends when the gift is recorded. This one kept going until there was something physical to stand in front of, and I was the person who got to show it to them.
